The Artizon Museum, Ishibashi Foundation (Director: Ishibashi Hiroshi), presents Dialogues of the Muses: The Paris Opera House and the Arts.

The Paris Opera House is known as a glorious sacred space for ballet and opera performances. Founded in 1669 by King Louis XIV, the Paris Opera House has, throughout its history, consistently commissioned works with artistically innovative, even revolutionary, potential from librettists, composers, and artists. This exhibition explores the history of the Paris Opera House from the seventeenth century to the present, examining the relationships between various fields of art and their appeal from a comprehensive artistic perspective. The focus is particularly on the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, the age of romantic ballet, grand opera, and the Ballets Russes. Introducing the multifaceted appeal of the Paris Opera House from artistic, cultural, and sociological perspectives, using about 250 works from the Bibliothèque nationale de France and other sources in Japan and abroad, this exhibition reveals its historic significance. In making the complex connections between the Paris Opera House and many arts, this exhibition is an utterly unprecedented venture.

What is the Paris Opera House?

France's iconic setting for musical theater performances, this gorgeous building in the 9th arrondissement of Paris was planned as one part of the modernization of Paris in the latter half of the nineteenth century and completed in 1875. The theater is called the Palais Garnier, after its architect, Charles Garnier. During the more than 350 years since its predecessor, the Académie Royale de Musique, was founded by King Louis XIV in 1669, it has always commissioned works that make possible artistic advances and innovations from librettists, composers, and artists. In 1989, a new theater, the Opéra Bastille, was completed. Today, both Opera Houses present ballets and operas, from the classics to contemporary works.

Exhibition Highlights

1. 200 works from the Bibliothèque nationale de France, the Musée d'Orsay, and other sources, on display in Japan

The Department of Music of the Bibliothèque nationale de France has a large collection of materials related to French opera and ballet, with a focus on works that have been performed at the Paris Opera House. This exhibition introduces about 200 works from that collection, plus works from the Musée d'Orsay, including Edgar Degas's The Dance Class, and other works related to the Opera House from sources in Japan and abroad.

2. Interpreting the appeal of the Opera House as a “comprehensive work of art”

From set designers and costume designers during the rule of Louis XIV to the composers of Grand Opera and the dancers performing Romantic Ballet in the nineteenth century and performers in the twenty-first century, the Paris Opera House has built its own distinctive artistic policies through collaboration among creators in a host of fields. Here we explore that process and its results.

3. Two of Manet's paintings of the Opera House on Display

The nineteenth-century French artist Édouard Manet (1832-83) took the Opera House as his subject in several works, including one that the Artizon Museum owns. For this exhibition, it is being displayed with another on that subject from the Washington National Gallery, in a rare opportunity to view both.
