The Strangers' Gaze—Japanese Artists in Europe

October 24 [Sat], 2026 - January 31 [Sun], 2027

KURODA Seiki, Woman Sewing, 1890, Artizon Museum, Ishibashi Foundation

The Artizon Museum, Ishibashi Foundation (Director: ISHIBASHI Hiroshi), presents The Strangers' Gaze— Japanese Artists in Europe.
Since 1868, with the Meiji Restoration, many people from Japan have traveled to Europe to study aspects of Western culture. For artists, studying in Europe brought them into contact with famous Occidental paintings and the latest artistic trends, both of which they absorbed insatiably.

"Étranger," an essay by the poet and novelist Shimazaki Toson, records the passion of his compatriots for engaging in lively conversations about art and embarking on sketching trips. Through their experiences as an étranger, a stranger, they created a great variety of works: basic dessin in art classes, copies of works in art museums, portraits of the people with whom they interacted in that alien land, landscape paintings created while out sketching. Those works are also a source of information for speaking eloquently about what they were looking at and what they learned from.

This exhibition presents over a hundred vibrant paintings from the Ishibashi Foundation Collection that artists, including Kuroda Seiki, Fujishima Takeji, Yasui Sotaro, and Fujita Tsuguharu, created while in Europe. Special Selections from the Collection will also be on view in the exhibition area.

Highlights

1. All Created in Europe: The Fascination of Japanese Western-style Painting, Interpreted Through Works Created While in Europe

This exhibition is composed entirely of works created by Japanese artists in Europe, while they were studying there. Hyakutake Kaneyuki's Reclining Nude, a landmark painting, is from the earliest period in which Japanese artists painted nudes in oils. It also demonstrates the high level of technical mastery he had acquired. In Kuroda Seiki's Woman Sewing, the model is a woman that the artist became close to while in France. The luminous plein-air style, filled with light and color, that Kuroda mastered in France exerted so much influence that it inspired what was called the New School and split the field of Western-style painting in Japan. These works from their European sojourns not only represent an aspect of the development of Japanese Western-style painting but are also filled with the fresh appeal of artists still in training.

2. Not Just Paris! Pilgrimages to Sacred Places, Artists' Colonies, Travels to Ancient Sites

Most of the Western-style artists who went to Europe headed for Paris, where they painted its beautiful urban landscapes. They made pilgrimages to "sacred terrain," including the ateliers of artists they admired and famous places depicted in acclaimed works. They also set out together on sketching trips to areas on the outskirts of Paris, where life was less expensive than in the city and magnificent scenes unfolded. For example, they set off for Aix-en-Provence, Cézanne's home, or converged on the artist colony at Grez-sur-Loing, where Kuroda Seiki and many other artists from foreign lands gathered. They also went further, visiting ancient sites in Italy and Greece in search of the origins of Western art. This exhibition introduces stories of the places that captivated them.

3. A Large Exhibition—More Than a Hundred Western Paintings from the Ishibashi Foundation Collection

Fujishima Takeji's Black Fan, widely celebrated as a masterpiece of the female figure, is a work that Fujishima cherished above all others in his later years. It entered our collection thanks to his deep relationship of trust with our founder, Ishibashi Shojiro. It is also said that Shojiro once entertained the idea of creating a "museum of copies," and, on the occasion of Takata Rikizo's going to Europe, commissioned him to make copies of old master paintings, which Shojiro then added to his collection. The Ishibashi Foundation also owns many other signature works, created during artists' stays in Europe, including Asai Chu's Washing Place in Grez-sur-Loing and Sakamoto Hanjiro's Woman with a Hat. This exhibition also marks the first public showing of our new acquisitions, including Masamune Tokusaburo's Fresh Verdure, Hazama Inosuke's Approach to the Village (View of Besançon) and Seafront Road in Nice, and Takashima Yajuro's Foggy Day. This large-scale exhibition presents, on two floors, more than a hundred Western-style paintings from the collection.

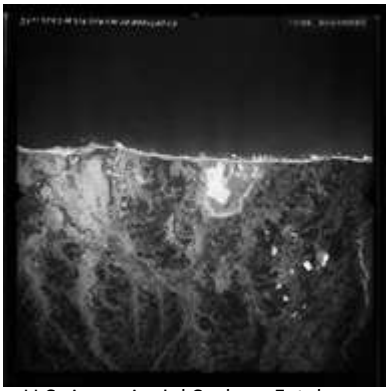
Jam Session: The Ishibashi Foundation Collection × FUJII Hikaru WHOSE LIGHT?



U.S. Army Aerial Surbey, Fytaba, Fukushima, 1947

Since its opening, the Artizon Museum has held its annual Jam Session, a collaborative exhibition that combines works from the Ishibashi Foundation Collection with those of a contemporary artist. For the seventh Jam Session, we welcome Fujii Hikaru, who has studied the close relationship between the arts, society, and history through detailed research and fieldwork.
In this exhibition, Fujii focuses on the central theme of "light = truth," from Plato's "Allegory of the Cave," in Book VII of The Republic. Rather than focusing on what the light illuminates, he inverts the question to "Who is shining that light?" and critically reexamines the very structure of truth itself. In response to that query, this exhibition displays works from the Ishibashi Foundation Collection, following a timeline from ancient times, the middle ages, the modern period, and the postwar period, along with work by Fujii, including new work by the artist.
